The Ukraine, the large eastern European nation, was an international tug-of-war. The Germans, with the industrial machine of their new empire, called the Soviet Union its protector. Russia, also a giant landmass, came to play a critical role in the outcome. This was the land that would become known as, the Soviet Union. The time was 1920. There was an awful lot going on, and yet, little was known, unknown even. I was in the Soviet Union when it was about to end. During the Russian Revolution, the Russian army had been defeated by the Germans and the Soviets. The Bolsheviks had seized power and eventually taken control of Russia. They wanted the rest of the world to join them in the Communist Manifesto. They even sent their first plane to Paris, and then on to London. I was so young that I couldn't even tell the difference between a plane and a helicopter. The world outside of the Soviet Union, that was the rest of the world that had not joined the Communists, had been on a counter-revolution. For almost a decade the Great Powers had fought, in their fight to keep the Soviet Union from swallowing them whole. Finally, the Red Army had won. Lenin died and Joseph Stalin was named the new dictator. I remember the night it started. In the middle of the night, before dawn, I was awakened by the sound of a low, harsh, metallic rumbling. At first, it sounded as if a large number of trucks were passing along the street outside. But, that was not possible. Moscow was dead. Many roads were impassable, blocked by tanks and artillery. It was not possible to get in or out. By the time the sun rose the Ukrainian territory of Chernarus, was being taken from the Soviet Union. Fighting continued for several days, but soon, the German Army won. The Red Army went into retreat, surrendering large chunks of their military. They then retreated, only to be repelled by the German forces. The end of the “Red Terror” was in
