Never ask for a password. You don't need it. ~~~ tobinharris Thanks for replying and for stopping me from posting this. ----- tus88 Do you have a HN account that you can share with the domain? I ask as I can read the article and find the HN users complaining about the login requirements. ~~~ badrabbit If you want to read the article, there's no login requirements for non subscribers. ~~~ tus88 Then why not make the "subscribe" button work? ----- apeiron What happens if you try to un-subscribe? Are they just ignored or do they stick around as lurkers for good? $\sim \sim$ badrabbit There's no way to unlist myself either. ~~~ apeiron This is my concern as well, but the unsubscribe link is pretty hidden in the footer. I wonder if there's a way to contact them individually if need be. $\sim \sim \sim$ egwynn I was trying to unsubscribe to their newsletter. If it's not clear, here's the way to unsubscribe from any email list: [At least their newsletter is small. ----- dudul The author is not really into cryptography at all. ----- Tehnix I was wondering, what's your plan if Google starts intercepting your traffic, and make it visible to all users in the network? This kind of application should be very careful about that, because they need to tell everyone (apart from spammers) that they are participating, and that the service runs and connects to

3/5

I'm making a forms array which will be accessed using the $ POST. However i want to add values to this array from another array which will be generated upon submit on a form. Example: $form = array('name' => 'Kevin', 'address' => array('city'=>'Louisville','street' =>'123 Maple St.', 'postcode'=>'12345'),); $ids = array('1' => 'Kevin', '2' => 'Kevin', '3' => 'Kevin'); Will this code look something like this? foreach($ids as $id) $ 6d1f23a050
